

Blind Frontiers Podcast Episode 1 Show Notes

Opening the Door to Blind Frontiers: Inside the Criss Cole Rehabilitation Center

Duration: ~22 minutes

In this powerful debut episode of Blind Frontiers, host Jeff Molzow takes us inside the Criss Cole Rehabilitation Center (CCRC) in Austin, Texas—an innovative training facility for blind and visually impaired adults. From the moment students step through the doors, they begin a transformative journey toward independence, confidence, and career readiness.

Listeners will hear from passionate instructors and leaders who guide students through vital training in orientation and mobility, adaptive daily living skills, technology, braille, and career development. You'll also discover how departments like residential services, outreach, and counseling play a pivotal role in the holistic support system CCRC offers.

Whether it's mastering smartphone accessibility, navigating city streets with a white cane, preparing a meal independently, or preparing for a new job, this episode showcases how CCRC empowers blind Texans to live and work with autonomy and dignity.

Main Takeaway:

The Criss Cole Rehabilitation Center isn't just a school—it's a launchpad. Through expert instruction, unwavering support, and belief in each student's potential, CCRC helps blind individuals reclaim their independence, discover new possibilities, and achieve their career goals.
